Further details

An area of rain will move eastwards through Saturday and is likely to turn to snow as this runs into cold air over east and southeast England.

Snow is likely to fall to low levels on the leading edge of the rain area before snow levels gradually rise for many from the west. East Anglia and parts of Kent and Sussex look most at risk of seeing snow for longest. 1-3 cm of snow may fall fairly widely over these areas with 5-10 cm possible in places, mostly over parts of East Anglia and any higher ground.
